With an industry-relevant curriculum and focus on hands-on learning, Christ sets the benchmark in computer applications

Aravind Gowda

Securing a place at Bengaluru's Christ University is a cherished dream of students, with some 50,000 applications being received from across the country every year. As a deemed to be university, the institution (earlier known as Christ College) is synonymous with quality education and producing outstanding students.

"Christ students stand out in the crowd because of our holistic education," says Dr Fr Abraham Vettiyankal Mani, vice-chancellor, Christ University. "Moral values, social behaviour, empathy, emotional development and a meaningful approach towards life are some of the things we reinforce among students."

Christ College was set up by the Carmelites of Mary Immaculate, a Catholic group, in 1969. The University Grants Commission conferred autonomy to Christ in 2004 and it was declared a deemed to be university in 2008. With a total 21,000 students, Christ University is like a microcosm of India. The university is popular across the country and only 20 per cent of its students are from Karnataka.

The university is future-ready in various ways. For instance, Christ completed its entire admission process this year online. Due to the Covid pandemic, over 30,000 students were screened and interviewed online. The university is gearing up to launch online classes and conduct examinations online if the pandemic situation does not improve soon.

see and hear, that's what I learned at TISS." The Marathi film which focuses on depression and environmental conservation won the National Award for Best Feature Film. Bhavé's other work with co-director Sunil Sukthankar includes the TV show Bhains Barabar on women's education and short films for non-governmental organisations.

The field action projects (FAPs) are significant tools to bring about change.

These include a Special Cell for Women and Children, a programme that TISS first started in 1984 in Mumbai, to address issues such as domestic violence. Koshish is an initiative working on issues of destitution and homelessness, while Tarasha is a community-based recovery model for women recovering from mental disorders.

A lot has changed in the course of Maitra's three-decade-long teaching

MY EXPERIENCE AT TISS

VARUN CHATURVEDI
MA in Social Work in Mental Health

What's unique about campus life?

It's a mini India in itself. There's inclusivity on campus despite the diversity that it abodes. The sense of belonging, being accommodated and acceptance one gets here is phenomenal. I like how it assists to connect the dots of all the past experiences right since childhood and brings about a clear picture of life for oneself. It helps one understand oneself, one's position in the larger societal context and hence prepares one for working from micro to macro level structures/ institutions for emancipatory change to aim for egalitarian societies. In short, it prepares one for life

One change I want in my college

I would want every master student of the social science discipline to get a monthly stipend just like their counterparts in basic sciences/ clinical sciences do

The best facility in college

The library where I spend hours with the books

Quintessence is the annual TISS festival. There's also Samiksha, a student-led seminar where practitioners from the field of social work are invited to speak
